Our Mission

The CUNY Institute for Sustainable Cities seeks to create awareness and understanding of the connections between the everyday lives of urban citizens and their natural world, leading to the discovery and use of cities like New York as a learning laboratory to create a sustainable future for cities worldwide.

Changing The Way People Think About The Environment

Through workshops, seminars, lectures and discussions featuring some of the most prominent members of the environmental community, we reach out to a broad audience, seeking to change the way people think about the environment. Also, with our environmental internship program, we help students find environmental internships citywide to further their education and enhance future career opportunities.
